Extended Bio

K D Adamson has inspired millions around the world to rescue their hi-jacked future and make it great again, challenging our assumptions about geopolitics and society, business, the environment, economics, technology and ourselves.

A polymath with a genius level IQ and a low-threshold for BS she is sharp, funny and straight-talking on stage, screen, and in print renowned for her simple yet powerful ideas, thought-provoking opinions, and ability to distill complex, hot-button issues as a regular commentator on global events for BBC World News, Bloomberg, CNN, The Sun, Financial Times, Al Jazeera, Fast Company, Channel News Asia, and BBC R4 Today.

Expert in sustainable value creation, transformation, digitalization, AI, innovation, agility, ESG, leadership, and the blue, green and circular economies her candid advice and commercial acumen guides and influences leaders and organisations around the world, with a stellar client list comprising huge global brands, tech giants, multi-nationals, governments, non-profits and NGOs.

A pragmatic visionary and hopeful sceptic whose inspirational performances are likened to a TED talk on steroids and a Tarantino movie where no one died, her motto is dubito ergo sum' – 'I doubt, therefore I am'.

She is a fellow of the Royal Society for the Arts, a member of Chatham House, CERN Open Quantum Institute, Aristotelian Society, International Society for the Circular Economy and Society of Antiquaries.
